a $28 million cost estimate. After soft costs were added, it was going to take it up into the $30 million-plus range.

Helping the drop in cost was a decline in the cost of materials.

Members of the Council and Board of Commissioners had made it known that they needed to keep the cost under control. Working with all of the stakeholders, officials worked to bring the project down greatly over the course of a few months, particularly after the initial cost estimate came in all at a time when building costs were rising about 1% a month after spiking greatly in 2021.

Commissioners received new cost estimates on June 20 that showed significant decreases.

Based on a consulting firm's inflated estimate of $30.5 million for the project, it was originally estimated that it would cost a taxpayer with a $148,800, median-priced home in Steuben County about $39 in debt service a year to fund the judicial center.

What was not factored into that estimate was an existing bond that will expire early next year. Minus that payment, the cost is about 50% less than the original estimate.

Pictured is the west wall, or entrance, of the Steuben County Judicial Center. The building faces west from the corner of East South Street and South Martha Street on the Steuben County government campus. On Monday, the Steuben County Building Corp. approved a resolution to authorize sale of bonds to pay for the new, $26.2 million facility.
